TENTH BOYS GET ON BATTLE FIELD AHEAD OF ENEMY

The "dog" tents were pitched and dinner was eaten. This was another pretty sight and showed the efficiency of the modern army. The regiment was marched off the road a short distance and in five minutes, where there had been nothing but a sandy plain, was a tented city. It was a pretty sight and was commented on by all.

Dinner was had under the shade of these tents, consisting of baked beans, salmon and hard tack, and in another five minutes the regiment had moved off, leaving the plains as clear as before, with no visible signs of having been occupied. The entire two brigades occupied the plains and for quite a distance nothing could be seen but the little brown tents and then the barren plains.

The regimental bands accompanied their regiments as litter bearers for the first time in any of the guard maneuvers and they were pretty grouchy when they got back. They had no occasion to use the litters but said the empty litters were enough.

The boys had just got back to their quarters when a hard rain started and they had that to be thankful for. We are now in the midst of the rainy season for fall, and every day brings its rain, some lively ones, too. There is one advantage in the rain, as the temperature is always cool and fine following these rains.

FOUR CONVICTS ESCAPE

Saw Way Out of Cells and Scale Wall During Storm.

By Associated Press.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., Aug. 25.—The most daring escape in years from the state penitentiary became known today when prison officials learned that four convicts, one of them serving a life term for murder, sawed their way out of their cells last night and dug a thunderbolt tunnel to the prison walls.

Doodhounds immediately were put on the trail.

All the cells in the tier in which the convicts were confined locked with a sliding steel bar and this was out with saws. They climbed three plank guards and gained the outside of the cell building where they entered a long tunnel which connected with the power plant. A ladder found in the tunnel enabled them to scale the stockade walls.

Sleeping on Beaches Tempers Summer Heat for the Poor.

Such overheating heat as has affected New York, Chicago and other cities recently, resulting in deaths and prostrations, bears most heavily, of course, upon the poor. Such of them as can afford it flee to the beaches, where they find in the breezes from the ocean some relief from the high temperature. Many of them, like the family in the picture, pass the night on the sands.

At the Theatres.

SONSON THEATRE.

"WHAT HAPPENED AT 22"—A five reel drama featuring France Nelson and Arthur Ashley, will be shown at the Sonson Theatre today. To employ a descriptive phrase which has grown this picture to "intensely interesting." The two words sum up the content of "What Happened at 22" to a degree that hardly needs and requires elaboration. The story deals with a professional forger, his activities and his downfall. Added to the story of the capitation of the forger is the romance of Louise, a companion to the wife of the criminal, and the son of the house. "The Speed Klug," an imp two reel modern melodrama contains enough thrills to make the heart of any racing enthusiast come into his throat. The picture was produced by Richard Stanton, is built around the fatal race at Corona, California, in which Bob Burman, the speed demon, was killed. The speed with which the cars thunder around the track is not simulated or increased by the cameraman, as the racing shots were taken in the actual course of the race. Close-ups are shown of Bob Burman, Barney Oldfield, Joe Dawson and other famous drivers. "What Darwin Mixed," a Victor comedy with Victor Potel. "The Duke of Chicle Con Carne," a Victor comedy with Lee Moran and Eddie Lyons. Monday the mystery serial, "The Mysteries of Myra," with Jean Seithers.

AT THE PARADISE.

"THE EYE OF THE NIGHT"—The new Triangle release, presenting William H. Thompson, the venerable star in addition to a Keystone Comedy in two acts, are today's attractions. "The Eye of the Night" narrates the shapely story of a slave's misadventures, of her struggles for existence among the narrow minded bigots in the town and of her ultimate discovery that the old keeper of the light, the only mortal who forgives her sin and receives her into his care, is her father. It is made powerful by the pathos of its situations and is agreeably relieved by the intermittent touches of quaint comedy. One of the valuable assets of the play is the surpassing beauty of its scenes. Among the more vivid scenes of the piece are those which show a fierce aerial attack on the village, the war being an important incident in the plot. Nearly 1,000 persons were engaged in making the picture, and an entire English village is shown in the course of action. The picturesque scenery of the California coast is said to have never been depicted on the screen with more success than in "The Eye of the Night." This extraordinary screen play is designed to depict the human tragedies and despairs that exist in the background of life, and that are pressed into every dollar bill in a remarkably novel manner. Douglas Fairbanks is appearing in "Mystery of a Leapling Fish," a Keystone comedy in two acts. Charles Chaplin will be seen Thursday, September 7, in "One A. M.," his latest comedy success.

PAIGE

The Standard of Value and Quality

Perhaps you have noticed the great number of Paige "Fairfields" that are driven by women. No car on the American market enjoys greater popularity with the fair sex.

It is, of course, the exquisite design of this car that makes the first appeal to feminine fancy. But the mechanical features, too, are exceptionally well adapted to the woman driver.

Just one year ago, it was a "Fairfield" that Miss Joan Sawyer, the celebrated dancer and suffragist, selected for her remarkable trip across the continent. With absolutely no previous experience as a motorist, this courageous little woman made the tour from New York to San Francisco—a total distance of 3,895 miles without a mishap of any kind.

At the end of the journey, Miss Sawyer wrote these glowing words of appreciation to the factory in Detroit:

"You may believe me, gentlemen, when I tell you that the Paige 'Fairfield' is, in every respect, the ideal touring car for a woman. It is no effort at all to operate the pedals and levers and, after a long day's run of 200 miles or more, it was a delightful surprise to find myself untroubled in spirit and unconscious of any unusual strain whatever. No more comfortable car than the Paige was ever made."

If you wish to bring joy to a wife, mother or sister, make arrangements with the Paige dealer to give her a ride in the New Series Paige Fairfield "Six-46."

That will settle the family "automobile problem" once and for all time.

That tells the story why THE COURIER is Connellsville's biggest and best newspaper. It is without a real competitor in its field.

A SHORTAGE OF SPOT FURNACE COKE KEEPS PRICE UP FOR STANDARD GRADES

As High as $2.85 Has Been Paid While Sales at $2.90
are Rumored.

NO INTEREST IN CONTRACTS

Increasing Demand and Prices for Coal
Will Tend to Support Coke; Turning
Orders Into By-Product Coal
Orders Will Prevent Over Production

Special to The Weekly Courier.
PITTSBURGH, Aug. 25.—The coke market continues quiet but very strong. There is apparently a definite shortage of furnace coke for spot shipment as suggested by the high price that is paid when a lot is really required, up to $2.85 for standard grades with there are rumors that $2.90 has been done.

No interest is manifested in furnace coke on contract and there is really no market price for so much has been secured since the last contracts for the remainder of the year were made that negotiations would have to be started on a fresh basis if any serious inquiry should be developed from consumers.

The movement of foundry coke is rather slow but production is likewise restricted, on account of labor conditions, and prices are still maintained.
The market remains quotable as follows:

Spot furnace .....	$2.75-$2.85
Contract furnace (monthly) ..	$2.90
Spot foundry .....	$2.75-$2.85
Contract foundry .....	$2.90-$3.00

The demand for Connellsville coal for by-product coking and other purposes has arisen so steadily and gradually that its influence in making the coke market at this time may easily be underrated. It is a question whether coke prices are being made in the coke market or in the coal market.

There are prices for coal and for coke
at which it is as profitable to sell the one or the other, and thus so long as coal can be sold at a certain price coke that would be made from the coal would not be sold for less. The demand for coal has gradually risen until it affords a very considerable measure of support for coke at any $2.75 or $2.85 and in the coal trade all the predictions are that still higher prices are going to obtain in the next two or three months, or until the close of the lake shipping season at least.

There is considerable discussion in trade circles as to the amount by which coke production will be reduced when regular coal shipments of full contract volume are made to the by-product ovens of the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Company, now being put into operation. There were coke shipments to this interest of 70,000 tons a month and the shippers of the coke must in future ship coal instead. The plans indicated a curtailment of coke production, in order to find the coal required, of less than one half, but there is doubt now whether even one-half the coke can still be made and it may be that coke production will have to be curtailed by nearly the entire 70,000 tons a month. If so there would be little prospect of coke becoming more plentiful.

The pig iron market has become much more active. The buying movement in foundry and malleable grades which started a couple of weeks ago has broadened and there is a fair degree of activity, both for shipment over the remainder of this year and for shipment during the first half of next year, all at prices hitherto prevailing.

In addition to the activity in foundry
iron there have been some important purchases of basic iron. The Republic Steel Company has bought 10,000 tons for the first half of next year, while the Republic Iron & Steel Company has taken 10,000 or 15,000 tons for early shipment. A steel interest further west has closed for 30,000 tons. The Republic Iron & Steel Company also bought 15,000 tons of Dussanet iron. It is understood that in addition to this active buying several small lots of Dussanet and basic have been bought. Sentiment in pig iron circles is much improved and a few furnaces have started advancing their asking prices. Iron is still unobtainable at the old figures, as follows:

Dussanet .....	$11.00-$11.50
Basic .....	$11.00-$11.50
No. 2 foundry .....	$11.25-$11.50
Malleable .....	$11.25-$11.50
Gray large .....	$11.00-$11.25

These prices are for b. b. Valley furnaces, prices delivered Pittsburgh being higher by the 95-cent freight.

Mothered to Somerset.
J. A. Lawrence, of Lawrence & Critchfield, contractors on the new high school, wife and son, and Mr.
and Mrs. D. H. Flick of South Prospect street, moved to Somerset today to attend a picnic and spend the week end with friends.

Wine a Medal.

son of Attorney and Mrs. L. B. Brownfield of Uniontown, formerly of Connellsville, won the Tuxis medal, which was awarded to him by the Naval school at Culver, Ind., for general proficiency.

COKE TRADE SUMMARY.

The Connellsville coke region
under a better business notwithstanding the threatened falling off of the bee-hive oven coke demand. Coke shipments last week aggregated 408,000 tons with a shipment of some 270,000 tons of coal which will this week be increased to approximately 300,000 tons. If coke shipments continue at 400,000 tons there will be the equivalent of a coke output of 800,000 tons weekly.
Youngstown Tube quit taking Connellsville coke last week and commenced to take Connellsville coal this week.

The demand for coke is greater than the supply. Owing to the hot weather yard labor is in shortage. This week between 300 and 400 cars stood over on Tuesday only partly loaded because the men were exhausted by the heat. This condition has made a stiff coke market spot furnace coking up to $2.90. There are in 100% supply but continue a little slow in placement, while coal cars are but 80% of demand.
The operators have 85.4% of their ovens fired, opening to about 80%. Six days in the running order. Last week 333 ovens were put out and 128 fired, making a net loss in the active list of 205 ovens.

Facts Versus Fallacies

FACT is a real state of things. FALLACY is an apparently genuine but really illogical statement or argument.

ACCORDING to Prohibition FALLACISTS, the city of Rockford, Ill., is an ideal sample of how "dry" law benefits. But the Rockford Register-Gazette tells a different story. Extracts from a recent issue of the paper read:

"ALDERMAN EMMET F. WILSON had his war paint on straight at the Monday night session of City Council and voiced his protest against the (local) situation in the following resolution:

"WHEREAS, there is a general violation of the liquor ordinance throughout the city; therefore resolved, that this council hereby demands that the mayor, the police department and the legal department clean up the abominable situation which exists in this city. If, after thirty days from date, said ordinance is not rigidly enforced, the council hereby agrees to refuse to vote any more salary to the above-mentioned departments," etc.

TO SHOW the deplorable state of the city of Rockford under its Prohibition law—a law that the "drys" cry out will eliminate nearly all crime and wrong doing—it is only necessary to quote from the report of Chief of Police Burgen as follows:

"THE arrests for 1915 total 2902 as against some 2300 for the year previous. The list includes 5 murderers, 30 burglars, 8 forgers, 19 gamblers, 1 perjurer, 1 embezzler, 2 rapists, 4 pickpockets, 27 abandoners of wife and children, 50 charged with larceny, and 6 guilty of malicious mischief. There were 402 plain drunks garnered during the year, and close to 300 additional drunks with 'disorderly' or other charge booked against them."

WITH these FACTS set forth in the Rockford Register-Gazette, taken from official reports of criminal conditions under Prohibition law that exist in that city of 45,000 inhabitants, does it not appear superfluous to have "dry" propagandists to claim that Prohibition laws prohibit? Even "wet" Chester, Pa., a city of the same population as Rockford, had only 1600 arrests for all causes last year, and but 308 arrests for drunkenness. The FALLACY of Prohibition is very well shown indeed by the FACTS and figures furnished in Prohibition territory.

Roumania's Attitude Holds Attention Of Both Sides in European War

UPPER: CROWN PRINCE CHARLES AND PREMIER BRATIANU OF ROUMANIA
LOWER: ROUMANIAN SOLDIERS

Roumania is preparing for war, according to Dr. Lederer, Bucharest. A telegraphic dispatch from Dr. Lederer said: "There is ground for some uncertainties as to the attitude of Rou-mania. The outward life of the city is greatly changed. Gay Bucharest has become a grave city, and all like signs in public life indicate that everybody is preparing for eventualities and that the country is getting ready for war. I still believe that Premier Bra-tiano is playing a game with Russia.

In political negotiations at Bucharest von Hindenburg is now playing the foremost role." All the Paris morning newspapers commented at length on the possibility of Roumania joining in the war. The meetings that are in progress in the Bucharest are taken to mean that all the various developments in the situation are being seriously considered. The statement is made on good authority that the number of Roumanian troops that can be mobilized exceeds 100,000. It was reported recently that the Teutonic powers had offered territory to Roumania as a compensation for keeping out of the war.

UNCLE JOE THE STORY TELLER

He Talks to the Children About the Bee Cities.

Places in Which Dwell Thousands of Inhabitants, Every One of Which Obeys Strictly the Most Rigid Laws.

"DID you ever go and see the 'Bee City' you told us about last time?" asked Elsie of Uncle Joe, the Story Teller. "You know, that Bill Bradley, who promised to show and tell you a whole lot about bees?"

"Yes," answered Uncle Joe. "And I was well rewarded for my time, for Bill had saved up enough money to purchase a Spanish queen bee and had already fitted and swarmed her, and was well started on the road to prosperity. For, little old Bill Bradley is now one of the most successful specialists of the country and probably one of the largest shippers of honey to market."

"What about his queen bee?" broke in Elsie.

"Well," said Uncle Joe, "if you want to know about it, I'll tell you. And this is:

Uncle Joe's Story of the Queen Bee.

"It was several weeks before I got over to Bill's, and in the meantime he had taken the honey from the wild hive we had located. With the proceeds of that, combined with what he had saved up before, he had sent for a Spanish queen bee. Of course, you know, he didn't have to send all the way to Spain. Spanish bees are common in America, and their purity of breeding strain is preserved in all its straightness, the same as Belgian hares.

"Even his father didn't know about it. Nobody knew about it but Bill and the postmaster. Uncle Sam likes honey, and to further the industry of bee culture and honey making, rates the queen bee as an exception to the general rule that nothing alive may be forwarded through the mails."

"Bill had built his own hive, 'Spanish like,' he said, 'so she would feel at home,' and had taken it to the woods. From that and subsequent visits to the location of Bill's first business enterprise and from further investigation on his own part, your Uncle Joe presumes to tell you the following: what he hopes will prove interesting facts concerning bees:

"A bee hive in a city in itself and may contain from twenty thousand to sixty thousand inhabitants. A single queen rules over all. In this city each citizen follows the laws, going out when it is time to go out, coming home at proper hours, and staying at home when it is his or her duty. In the winter time, having no fire to warm them, the bees cling together in a bunch, just the same as children cuddle."

"One might suppose, just because one single queen rules over so many, having so many subjects to work for her and wait upon her, she would do nothing but amuse herself. On the contrary, like too, above the laws laid down for her guidance, and never, except on one or two state occasions, goes out of the city, but works as hard as the rest in performing her own royal duties."

"The gates of the bee city, or hive, are so narrow that the inhabitants can only just pass each other on their way through them, yet thousands go in and out every hour of the day; some bringing materials to build new houses, others food and provisions to store up for the winter; and while among this rapidly moving throng, yet in reality each has its own work to do, and perfect order reigns over the whole."

"Bees prefer to work in the dark. They are gifted with double sight, one for the bright glare of noonday sun and the other for their own hive's gloom; their eyes accommodate themselves adjusting to serve the purpose of the task upon which they are engaged."

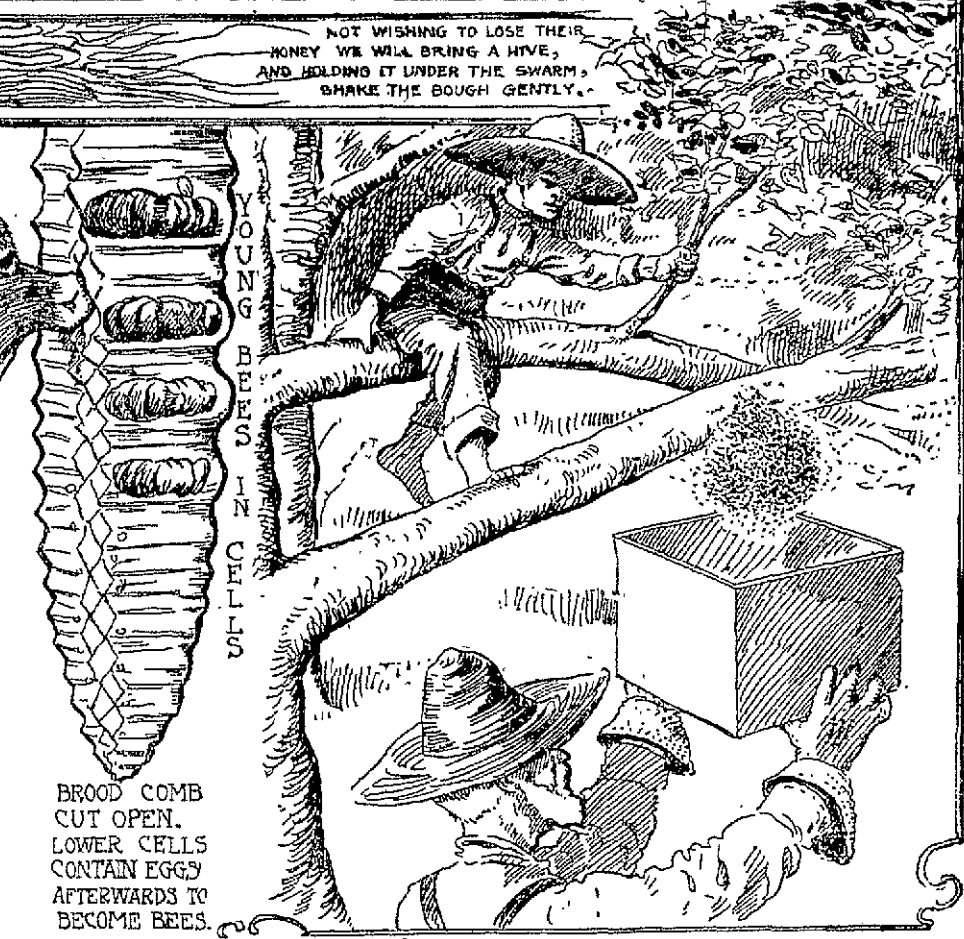

"Francis Huber, a blind naturalist, was the first to discover many interesting facts concerning bees. Huber had started on the study of the rollers in sweets when his sight failed. He had others construct an inner glass hive with an outer common covering which could be lifted at will. When the covering was lifted he was told of what the bees inside were doing. Glass slides, such as are employed in some modern hives, hinder rather than help bee culture. Bees object to too much light being cast on their private doings, and will quit a hive if too frequently disturbed."

"Take a May morning, about 10 o'clock; go into the apple orchard of a farm where bees are cared for, and if you are fortunate enough to find a swarm you will see a black object which looks very much like a large plum pudding very thick hanging from the limb of an old apple tree. In swarming bees cling to each other by their legs; each bee with its two fore-legs clinging to the two hind-legs of the one above it. In this way as many as 20,000 bees may be clinging together, and yet hang so firmly that a bee, even from quite the center of the swarm, can disengage herself from her neighbors and pass through to the outside of the cluster whenever she wishes."

"If these bees were left to themselves, they would find a home after a time in a hollow tree, or under the roof of a house, or in some other cavity, and begin to build their honey comb there. But not wishing to lose their honey we will bring a hive, and holding it under the swarm, shake the bough gently so that the bees will fall into it, and cling to the sides as we turn it over on a piece of clean linen, on the stand where the hive sits to be."

"Before many minutes are over the bees have begun to disperse and to make arrangements in their new home. The drones, or male bees, which are larger and of a darker color than the rest, do no work, depending on the others to wait on them and feed them. The queen bee is blackest of all, and has a longer body and shorter wings. She is the mother of the hive and often lays as high as two hundred eggs a day in the wax cells which the worker bees have built for that purpose."

"The wax cells of the honey comb are constructed of material made by the worker bee itself. This bee has eight little wax pockets under her abdomen, which fill up through a process of digestion in the bee's stomach, for when the bee sucks the honey drop from the flower it is drawn into a first stomach, or honey-bag, to be emptied later on into the wax cells in the hive prepared for its reception. So, when a bee wants to make wax it hangs quietly for twenty-four hours, and in that time the contents of the honey bag are absorbed and digested by the bee's second stomach and pass into the eight little pockets in the form of wax."

"As fast as the eggs are deposited in the cells prepared for them, they are taken in charge by what are called the nursing bees. In two or three days each egg has become a tiny maggot, or larva, and the nursing bees at this time feed it a mixture of pollen and honey which they have prepared in their own mouths, thus making a kind of sweet bath in which the larva lies. In five or six days the larva grows so fat upon this that it nearly fills up the cell, and then the bees seal up the mouth of the cell with a thin cover of wax, made of little rings with a tiny hole in the center."

"As soon as the larva is covered it begins to give out from its underlip a whitish, silken film, made of two threads of silk glued together, and with this it spins a covering or cocoon all round itself, and so it remains for about ten days more. At least, just twenty-one days after the egg was laid, the young bee is quite perfect, and begins to eat her way through the cocoon and waxen lid, and scrambles out of her cell. After twenty-four hours attention from the nursing bees she is ready to go to work with the rest."

"After all the worker-eggs are laid the queen has business to lay, in some rather larger cells, eggs from which drones, or male bees, will grow up in about twenty days. Meanwhile the worker bees have been building on the edge of the cones some very curious cells which look like thin tubes hanging with the open side upwards, and about three days after the queen stops in laying drone-eggs and goes to put an egg in one of these cells. These eggs are to be future queens, and the intervals between their laying are to insure corresponding intervals in their hatching, for but one queen bee may be in one hive. Just before the first princess is born the old queen mother flies away with all of those subjects which wish to accompany, and establishes a new home or hive. Just before the second princess is born the new ruler flies away in the same manner. Several other swarms may leave the hive, but when there are no more bees desirous of leaving, the remaining young princesses are stung to death in their cells by the latest queen. And it is not long after until the drones are put to death by the workers, for their day of usefulness is over. Drones have no stings and cannot defend themselves."

"Only the young bees, born late in the season, live on till the next year to work in the spring. The queens live longer, probably about two years, and then she, too, dies, after having had a family of many thousands of children."

MAJORS GET MANY COLLEGE STARS

Unusual Number of Varsity Players Join Pro Ranks.

FEW OF THEM WILL STICK.

Detroit and Connie Mack Landed Some Promising Material—McGraw Secured a Couple—Big League Scouts Hunted Campus Games.

An unusual number of college baseball players have entered the big league this summer. How many will be prominent by the time the big league season ends?

If the usual average obtains, the successful ones will be in a minority. Yet, again, some of the universities have displayed ability on the university diamond which bespeaks at least a certain amount of success.

George Smith of Columbia, for example. After he has been swarmed down, there would appear to be strong likelihood of his being a valuable member of the Giant pitching squad. And Pie Way has also gone to McGraw's team. Way is a husky youth, who has speed, control and curves. He may develop into a big league star.

Detroit Gets Good Player.

Watt, the Columbia captain, has signed with Detroit, and Andy Gledhill, who has no doubt this player will make good in his company. Watt, he says, is one of the elite of students of the college, and he has every reason to believe he will develop swiftly. Gledhill, it is reported from New Haven that Mahan will sign with the Americans, but Ernest Soucy said in New London the other day that Mahan was not going to play professional baseball.

"He turned down an offer from the Boston Braves to my personal knowledge," said Soucy, "and I don't think he will play ball unless he receives an offer of a salary much larger than he has yet received."

Athletics Have Good Catcher.

Jim Johnson, the Ursinus pitcher, made his debut for the Athletics against the Red Sox and received a terrific lambasting. Red Carroll, the Tulsa catcher, however, made a fine impression, catching Johnson in the style and nipping three men who attempted to steal second.

"The idea is not to make baseball an end, but merely a means either to completing their education or of laying solid means to assist them in business projects. But others, it is to be feared, have not looked into the future, at least not beyond the immediate future. Baseball, if they make good, will pay them more at the outset than they could reasonably expect to earn in business, and that is the lure. A few will probably catch on at once; others eventually will be transferred to minor leagues for 'development.' Very few college men ever return from the so-called business. Even assuming they not only succeed, but become famous as professional baseball players, what does it all amount to in the end?"

Lure of the Diamond Is Strong.

Some years ago one of the colleges had a brilliant baseball player. He was also a brilliant student. His inclinations were toward law, but he went into the big leagues, where his name was established at once. He stayed with one club a number of years, then he went to another and after twenty years of service showed down. Now he is running a minor league team. As he looks back into the past and asks what baseball has done for him he must find the answer rather depressing. His professors when he left college agreed that he had it in him to succeed in almost anything to which he directed his mind. But the quick money and the enormous fame of the professional diamond were too alluring to be resisted.

Scouts Attend Ball Games.

"It would be well if the colleges and universities took steps to combat this annual descent upon their players of the big league managers, whose only thoughts are selfish, whose only ideals are mercenary," said a writer recently. "College coaches who work with one eye on the teams they coach and the other on big league managers from whom they expect a handsome gratuity in return for student ball players should be suppressed and promptly. Go to a college game in which players who stand out above the average are competing and you will see scouts from professional lines watching every move of the men whom they expect to sign, studying them and sizing up their points as though they were live stock."

GOOD CATCHERS ON BENCH.

Giants and Dodgers Each Have Pair of Them in Reserve.

In Bradley Koehler, Otto Miller and Lew McCarty the Giants and Dodgers have three catchers who probably would be regular backups if they were on other teams than those harboring such receivers as Bill Barnden and Chief Meyers.

All three men are cool headed, capable catchers, and in addition are hard hitters. Miller and McCarty divided the backstopping for the Dodgers last year, but both are warming the bench now that Meyers is wearing the spangles of the Brooklyn club. Koehler joined the Giants last fall and has proved himself to be a very fine understudy for Barnden.

COBB IS TO SHUN GOLF.

Agrees With Maty That Hitting Is Likely to Be Affected.

Ty Cobb of the Detroit Tigers is another baseball star who has decided not to mix golf with his regular business during the ball season. Dispatches recently printed declared that Christy Mathewson had reached the same conclusion.

Cobb holds that the golf stroke is so much different from the batting swing that his hitting was likely to be affected.

YELLOWSTONE PARK.

Early Stories of Its Amazing Sights Were Not Solved.

The first recorded visit to Yellowstone park was made by John Colter in 1826. He was a trapper and adventurer who took refuge there from the Indians. His story of its wonders was discredited. The next recorded visit was by a trapper named Joseph Meek in 1829, who described it as "a country smoking with vapor from boiling springs and bubbling with gases issuing from small orators." From some of these errors, he said, "issued blue flames and molten brimstone," which, of course, was not true, though doubtless Meek fully believed it to be the truth.

Between 1830 and 1840 Warren Angus Ferris, a clerk in the American Fur company, wrote the first description of the Fitchville Geyser basin, but it was not until 1852 that the geyser district was actually defined and the geyser precisely located. This was done by Father du Sault, the famous Jesuit missionary.

It remained for a government expedition, sent out in 1870 under command of Captain W. F. Reynolds, to first really explore and chart the region. Several private explorers followed, but so great was public incredulity as to the marvels they described that they did not dare tell their experiences before any general audiences.

The large exploring expedition under Governor Henry D. Washburn, surveyor general of Montana, in 1870 finally established the facts to the public belief and led to the creation of the Yellowstone National park.

The LONE STAR RANGER

AROMANCE OF THE BORDER

By ZANE GREY

Author of
"THE LIGHT OF WESTERN STARS"

"RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE", ETC.

Copyright 1916 by Zane Grey and Houghton Mifflin Company

"Bill, I'll bet you can't spill whatever's in the bucket that peon's packin'!" said the outlaw called Jim Black. Black came up with the action of a hawk about to swoop.

Duane glanced from Black to the road, where he saw a crippled peon carrying a tin bucket toward the river. This peon was a half-witted Indian who lived in a shack and did odd jobs for the Mexicans. Duane had met him often.

"Jim, I'll take you up," replied Black. "Something perhaps a horse in the black, caused Duane to whirl. He caught a leaping gleam in the outlaw's eye."

"Aw, Bill, that's too far a shot," said Jasper, as Black rested an elbow on his knee and sighted over the long heavy Colt. "The distance to the peon was about fifty paces, too far for even the most expert shot to hit a moving object so small as his bucket."

Duane marvelously keen in the alignment of sights, was positive that Black held too high. Another look at the hard face, now tense and dark with blood confirmed Duane's suspicion that the outlaw was not aiming at the bucket at all. Duane leaped and struck the level gun out of his hand. Another outlaw picked it up.

Black fell back astounded. Deprived of his weapon, he did not seem the same man, or else he was cowed by Duane's significant and formidable front. Suddenly he turned away without even asking for his gun.

CHAPTER VIII.

Want a contest Duane thought, the calm evening of that day presented to the state of his soul. This third flag of a desperate man had thrown him off his balance. It had not been fatal but it threatened so much despair had seized upon him and was driving him into a reckless mood when he thought of Jennie.

He had forgotten her. He had for gotten that he had promised to save her. He had forgotten that he meant to shift out as many lives as might stand between her and freedom. This very reason drove him on to his morbid introspection. She made a difference. How strange for him to realize that! He felt grateful to her. He had been forced into outlaws, she had been stolen from her people and carried into captivity. They had met in the river bottom, he to lead her into her despairing life, she to be the means, perhaps, of keeping him from sinking to the level of her captors. It became conscious of a strong and beating desire to see her, talk with her. These thoughts had run through his mind while on his way to Mrs. Bland's house. He had let Eucher go on ahead because he wanted more time to compose himself. Darkness had about not in when he reached his destination. There was no light in the house. Mrs. Bland was waiting for him on the porch.

She embraced him, and the sudden, violent unfamiliar contact sent such a shock through him that he all but forgot the deep game he was playing. She, however, in her agitation did not notice his shivering. From her embrace and the tender, incoherent words that flowed with it he gathered that Eucher had acquainted her of his action with Black.

"He might have killed you!" she whispered more clearly; and if Duane had ever heard her in a voice he heard it then. It soothed him. It was easy, even pleasant to know her, but Duane resolved that whatever her abandonment might become, he would not go further than the line she made him set.

"Duck you love me?" she whispered. "Yes—yes, the bluest out, eager to get it over, and even as he spoke he caught the pale gleam of Jennie's face through the window. He felt a shame he was glad she could not see.

The moon had risen over the eastern bulge of dark mountains, and now the valley was flooded with mellow light, and shadows of cottonwoods waved against the silver.

Suddenly the clip-clop, clip-clop of hoofs caused Duane to raise his head and listen. Horses were coming down the road from the head of the valley. The hour was unusual for riders to come in. Presently the narrow, moonlit lane was crowded at its far end by black moving objects. Two horses Duane discerned.

"It's Bland!" whispered the woman, grasping Duane with shaking hands. "You must run! No, he'd see you. That'd be worse. It's Bland! I know his horse's trot."

Then she dragged Duane to the door, pushed him in.

"Duchre, come out with me! Duane, you stay with the girl! I'll tell Bland you're in love with her. Jen, if you give us away I'll wring your neck!"

The swift action and fierce whisper told Duane that Mrs. Bland was herself again. Duane stepped close to Jennie who stood near the window. Neither spoke, but her hands were outstretched to meet his own. They were small, trembling hands, cold as ice. He held them close, trying to convey what he felt—that he would protect her. She leaned against him, and they looked out of the window.

Duane saw the riders dismount down the lane and wearily come forward. A boy led away the horses. Duchre, the old fox, was talking loud and with remarkable ease, considering what he claimed as his natural cowardice.

The approaching outlaws hearing voices, halted a rod or so from the porch. Then Mrs. Bland uttered an exclamation ostensibly meant to express surprise and hurried out to meet them. She greeted her husband warmly and gave welcome to the other man. Duane could not see well enough in the shadow to recognize Bland's companion, but he believed it was Alloway.

"Dog-tired we are and starved," said Bland heavily. "Who's here with you?"

"That's Eucher on the porch. Duane is inside at the window with Jen," replied Mrs. Bland.

"Duane!" he exclaimed. Then he whispered low, something Duane could not catch.

"Why, I asked him to come," said the child's wife. She spoke easily and naturally and made no change in tone. "Jen has been ailing. She gets thinner and whiter every day. Duane came here one day with Duchre saw Jen and went looney over her pretty face, same as all you men. So I let him come."

Bland cursed low and deep under his breath. The older man made a violent action of some kind and apparently was quieted by a restraining hand.

Then he led the way to the porch, his spurs clinking, the weapons he was carrying rattling, and he flopped down on a bench.

"How are you, boss?" asked Eucher. "Hello, old man. I'm well, but all in."

Alloway slowly walked on to the porch and leaned against the rail. He answered Duchre's greeting with a nod. Then he stood there a dark, silent figure.

Mrs. Bland's full voice in eager questioning had a tendency to ease the situation. Bland replied briefly to her, reporting a remarkably successful trip.

Duane thought it was time to show himself. He had a feeling that Bland and Alloway would let him go for the moment. They were plainly non-plussed and Alloway seemed sullen, brooding.

"Jennie," whispered Duane "that was clever of Mrs. Bland. We'll keep up the deception. Any day now he's ready!"

She pressed close to him, and a barely audible "Hurry!" came breathing into his ear.

"Good night, Jennie," he said aloud. "Hope you feel better to-morrow."

Then he stepped out into the moonlight and spoke. Bland returned the greeting and though he was not smiling he did not show resentment.

"Met Jasper as I rode in, said Bland presently. "He told me you made Bill Black mad, and there's a liable to be a fight. What did you go off the handle about?"

Duane explained the incident. "I'm sorry I happened to be there. He went on 'It wasn't my business'."

"Scurry trick that'd been" muttered Bland. "You did right. All the same, Duane, I want you to stop quarreling with my men. If you were one of us—that'd be different. I can't keep my men from fighting. But I'm not called on to let an outsider hang around my camp and plug my rustlers."

"I guess I'll have to be hitting the trail for somewhere," said Duane. "Why not join my band? You've got a bad start already, Duane, and if I know this border you'll never be a respectable citizen again. You're a born killer."

"But I'm no gun-fighter," protested Duane. "Circumstances made me—"

"No doubt," interrupted Bland, with a laugh. "Circumstances made me a rustler. You don't know yourself. You're young, you've got a temper, your father was one of the most dangerous men Texas ever had. I don't see any other career for you. Instead of going it alone—a long wolf in the Texan's say—why not make friends with other outlaws? You'll live longer."

Eucher squirmed in his seat. "Boss, I've been givin' the boy exactly that same line of talk. An' he'd be a grand feller for the gang. I've seen 'im. Bill Black throw a gun on 'im. Billy the Kid, an' Murdoch, an' Chas. here—all the fastest men on the border. An' with apologies to present company, I'm here to say Duane has them all skinned. His draw is different. You can't see how he does it."

Eucher's admiring praise served to create an effective little silence. Alloway shifted uneasily on his feet, his spurs jangling faintly, and did not lift his head. Bland seemed thoughtful.

"That's about the only qualification I have to make me eligible for your band," said Duane, easily.

"It's good enough," replied Bland, shortly. "Will you consider the idea?"

"I'll think it over. Good night."

He left the group, followed by Eucher. When they reached the end of the lane, and before they had exchanged a word Bland called Eucher back. Duane proceeded slowly along the moonlit road to the cabin and sat down under the cottonwoods to wait for Duchre. As he sat there with a forbidding of more and darker work ahead of him there was yet a strange sweetness left to him, and it lay in thought of Jennie. The pressure of her cold little hands lingered in his. He did not think of her as a woman and he did not analyze his feelings. He just had vague, dreamy thoughts and imaginations that were interspersed in the constant and a series of plans to save her.

A shuffling step roused him. Eucher's dark figure came crossing the moonlight grass under the cottonwoods. The moment the outlaw reached him Duane saw that he was laboring under great excitement. It scarcely affected Duane. He seemed to be acquiring patience, calmness, strength.

"Bland kept you pretty long," he said.

"Wait till I get my breath," replied Duchre. He sat silent a little while, fanning himself with a sombrero though the night was cool and then he went into the cabin to return presently with a lighted pipe.

"Tine night he said, and his tone further acquainted Duane with Eucher's quiet humor. "Fine night for love affairs, by gum."

"I'd noticed that," rejoined Duane dryly.

"Back, listen to this here yarn. When I got back to the porch I seen Bland. Asked him some questions right from the shoulder. I was ready for them, an' I swore the moon was green cheese. He was satisfied. Bland always trusted me. An' I liked me too, I reckon. I hated to lie black that way. But he's a hard man with bad intentions toward Jennie, an' I'd double cross him any day."

"Then he went into the house. Jennie had gone to her little room, an' Bland called her to come out. Then, Buck, his next move was some surprise. He deliberately threw a gun on Kate. 'X's six he pointed his big blue Colt right at her, an' he says: 'I've a mind to blow out your brains!'

"Go ahead," says Kate cool as could be. "You lied to me," he roars.

"Kate laughed in his face. Bland slung the gun down an' made a grab for her. He choked her till I thought she was strangled. Alloway made him stop. She flopped down on the bed an' gasped for a while."

"Then he went in an' dragged poor Jen out. An' when I seen Bland twist her—hurt her—I had a queer hot feeling deep down in me an' for the only time in my life I wished I was a gun-fighter."

Wal Jen was whiter 'n a sheet, an' her eyes were big and stary, but she had nerve. First time I ever seen her show any."

"Jennie," he said "my wife said Duane came here to see you. I believe she's lyin'. I think she's been carryin' on with him an' I want to know if she's been an' you tell me the truth. I'll let you go. I'll send you to Huntsville, where you can communicate with your friends. I'll give you money."

"That must have been a hell of a minute for Kate Bland. If ever I seen death in a man's eye I seen it in Bland's. He loves her. That's the strange part of it. "Has Duane been comin' here to see my wife?" Bland asked fiercely.

"No," said Jennie. "He's fallen in love with you?"

"Kate said that."

"I—I'm not—I don't know—he wasn't tell me."

"But you're in love with him?"

"Yes," she said, an' Buck, if you could have seen her! She throwed up her head, an' her eyes were full of fire. Bland seemed dazed at sight of her. An' Alloway why that little funk of an outlaw cried right out. It was his plump center. He's in love with Jen. An' the look of her was enough to make any feller git it. He jest slunk out of the room told you, mebbe, that he'd been tryin' to git Bland to marry Jen to him o' even a tough like Alloway can love woman!"

Bland stamped up an' down the porch. He sure was dyin' hard.

"Jennie," he said, once more turnin' to her. "You swear in fear of your 't that you're tellin' truth. Kate's in love with Duane? She's let him come to see you? There's been nothin' between them?"

"No," I swear," answered Jennie, an' Bland sat down like a man kicked.

"Go to bed, you white-faced—"

Bland choked on some word or other—a bad one, I reckon—an' he positively shook in his chair.

"Jennie went then an' Kate began to have hysterics. An' your Uncle Duchre ducked his nut out of the door an' come home."

CHAPTER IX.

Both men were awake early, silent with the premonition of trouble ahead, thoughtful of the fact that the time for the long-planned action was at hand.

Buck, the sooner the better now," Eucher finally declared, with a glint in his eye. "The more time we use up now the less surprised Bland'll be."

"I'm ready when you are," replied Duane, quietly, and he rose from the table.

"Wal saddle up, then," went on Eucher gruffly. "Die on them two packs I made, one for each saddle. You can't tell—mebbe either boss will be carryin' double. It's good they're both big, strong horses. Guess that wasn't a wise move of your Uncle Duchre—bringin' in your horses an' bavin' them ready?"

Eucher, I hope you're not going to get in bad here. I'm afraid you are. Let me do the rest now," said Duane.

The old outlaw eyed him sarcastically.

"That'd be terrible now wouldn't it? If you want to know, why I'm in bad here, I didn't tell you that Alloway called me last night. He's gettin' wise pretty quick."

"Duchre you're going with me?" queried Duane, suddenly dilying the truth.

"Wal, I reckon. Either to hell or safe over the mountain! Now Buck, you do some hard a-gerrin' while I go down round. It's pretty early, which is all the better."

Eucher put on his sombrero and as he went out Duane saw that he wore a gun and cartridge belt. It was the first time Duane had ever seen the outlaw armed.

Duane packed his few belongings into his saddle-bags and then carried the saddle out of the corral. The hour had arrived, and he was ready. Time passed slowly. Finally he heard the shuffle of Eucher's boots on the hard path. The sound was quicker than usual.

When Duchre came around the corner of the cabin Duane was not so astounded as he was concerned to see the outlaw white and shaking. Sweat dripped from him. He had a wild look.

"Luck ours—so—fur, Buck!" he panted.

"You don't look it," replied Duane. "I'm terrible sick. Jest killed a man. First one I ever killed!"

"Who?" asked Duane, startled.

"Jackrabbit Benson. An' sick as I am I'm gloryin' in it. I went down round up the road. Saw Alloway goin' into Diggers. He's thick with the Diggers. Reckon he's a skin' question. Anyway I was sure glad to see him away from Bland's. An' he didn't see me. When I dropped into Benson's there wasn't nobody there but Jackrabbit an' some greasers he was startin' work. Benson never had no use for me. An' he up an' said he wouldn't give me a two-bit piece for my life. I asked him why."

"You're double crossin' the boss an' Chas. he said."

"Tack what'd you give fer your own life? I asked him."

"He straightened up surprised an' meen lookin'. An' I let him have it plumb center." He wilted an' the greasers ran. I reckon I'll never sleep again. But I had to do it."

Duane asked if the shot had attracted any attention outside.

"I didn't see anybody but the greasers. An' I sure looked sharp. Comin' back I cut a cross through the cotton woods past Bland's cabin plumb into Beppie an' when I inquired of his boss he said Bland had been up all night fightin' with the Senora. We're pretty lucky."

It seems so. "Well I'm going," said Duane tersely.

"Lucky! I should smile! Bland's been up all night after a most draggial' sick home. He'll be figgin' out this mornin' sleepin' sore an' he won't be expectin' hell before breakfast. You'll have to kill him. An' it'd save time to go fer your gun on sight. Might be wise, too, fer it's likely hell do the same."

"How about the horses?"

"I'll fetch them an' come along about two minutes behind you. Once on them horses, we can ride out of camp before Alloway or anybody else gets into action. Jennie ain't much heavier 'n a rabbit. That big black will carry you both."

"Buck a last word—look out for that Bland woman!"

Duane merely nodded and then, saying that the horses were ready, he strode away through the grove.

No outlaws were in sight. He saw several Mexican herders with cattle. Blue columns of smoke curled up over some of the cabins. The fragrant smell of it reminded Duane of his home and cutting wood for the stove. He noted a cloud of creamy mist rising above the river, dissolving in the sun light.

Then he entered Bland's lane. While yet some distance from the cabin he heard loud angry voices of man and woman. Bland and Kate sat quarreling. He took a quick survey of the surroundings. There was not even a Mexican in sight. Then he hurried a little. Halfway down the lane he turned his head to peer through the cottonwoods. This time he saw Duchre coming with the horses.

There was no indication that the old outlaw might lose his nerve at the end. Duane had feared this.

Duane now changed his walk to a clenching saunter. He reached the porch and then distinguished what was laid inside the cabin.

"If you do Bland, by Heaven I'll fix you and her." That was panted out in Kate Bland's full voice.

"Let me loose! I'm going in there. I tell you," replied Bland hoarsely.

"No! no! I won't let you. You'll choke the truth out of her—you'll kill her!"

"The truth!" hissed Bland.

"Yes, I lied. But she had to save me. You needn't murder her—for that."

Bland cursed horribly. Then followed a wrestling sound of bodies in violent straining contact—the scrape of feet—the jangle of spurs—a crash of sliding table or chair, and then the cry of a woman in pain.

Duane stepped into the open door inside the room. Kate Bland lay half across a table where she had been flung and she was trying to get to her feet. Bland's back was turned. He had opened the door into Jennie's room and had one foot across the threshold. Duane caught the girl's low, shuddering cry. Then he called out loud and clear.

With cat-like swiftness Bland wheeled, then froze on the threshold. His sight, quick as his action, caught Duane's menacing, unmistakable position.

Bland's big frame filled the door. He was in a bad place to reach for his gun. But he would not have time for a step. Duane read in his eyes the desperate calculation of chances. For a fleeting instant Bland shifted his glance to his wife. Then his whole body seemed to vibrate with the swing of his arm.

POLLY AND HER PALS—Paying Attention? Nope Only the Score!—By Cliff Sterrett.

PIRATES ARE NOW PUTTING UP A FINE BRAND OF BASEBALL

Jimmy Callahan Has Made Them Into Fighting Machine.

DISCIPLINE IS INSISTED ON

Suspension of Mamaux Not a Surprise. Jerpe Says Star Twirler Persistently Refuses to Obey Training Rules. Recruit From South Makes Good.

Pittsburg has taken a fine brace as evidenced from their hard fighting against the Eastern teams. Four out of five from the champion Quakers one week ago, the and a sound drubbing of Grover Alexander, the over-coming of a seven run lead in a game that seemed hopelessly lost, the tying up of the score when the Phillies had them one to nothing in the ninth; how unlike the faltering Buccaneers of the last two years. Saturday

Dodgers and Pirates staged one of the greatest pitching duels in the annals of the game and the fans seemed gratified in an even break since neither or more thrilling baseball never was seen anywhere and defeat in a close game after one thrilling victory suited the loaded Saturday throng.

The final game of the series won 16 innings and was won mainly on the wonderful work of left-hander Kautler, a strapping boy from the Coast who held the Phillies to one run and four hits in eight innings. He was taken out for a pinch hitter and Jimmy Evans, a recruit from the North Carolina Aggies pitched splendid ball and held such maulers as Cravath, Luderus and Kilmer in the palm of his hand without a run. Hinchman's wallop won.

The two-listed and brusque Jim Callahan has driven and lashed the Buccos into a real go. Lost ground earlier in the season cannot be made up. The suspension of Mamaux, the star pitcher of the club and one of the greatest in the game, was an indication that Cal is no respecter of persons. Mamaux received what he deserved. He is too much of a society bug and only twines his voice. In promised Fred Clark that he would go to bed at 10 o'clock in the Eastern Hotel at Hot Springs. At 10 o'clock Mamaux was not in his room. Fred took the key out of the door after looking it to a bell boy said:

"Take this key to the clerk, tell him to put it in an envelope and leave it for me. Don't let that fellow in this room or into the hotel. Let him stay out all night so that I get him right." Clarke was on the verge of letting Mamaux go but decided to give him a chance. Dreyfuss gave him a substantial increase during the height of his success last season but he would not stick to the ironclad rules of Manager Callahan and since Cal knows his business and isn't going to be imposed on he let his Irish disgust be known to the great Mamaux and gave him a vacation without pay. He will be reinstated shortly. The team has been steadily winning with the two south-paws, Kautler and Cooper pitching great ball.

Cooper is back in the great form he showed in 1914 when he not only pitched great ball but batted hard. He gives Callahan the least trouble and pitched a magnificent game, beating the Dodgers in 11 innings, 2 to 1. He downed the Giants on the last trip by 2 to 1 and has mastered superb control under the tuition of Cal where last year he was wild and uncertain.
